A WORLD PREMIERE STAGE EVENT FROM BOSTON-BASED THEATRE COMPANY SLEEPING WEAZEL

ARTSEMERSON ANNOUNCES ON-DEMAND VIRTUAL STREAMING ENGAGEMENT OF ITS CURRENT SHOW EVERYDAY LIFE AND OTHER ODDS AND ENDS

ON-DEMAND VIEWING WINDOW OPENS APRIL 01 AND IS AVAILABLE THROUGH APRIL 10, 2022 IN ARTSEMERSON’S VIRTUAL VENUE

[Boston, MA – Tuesday, March 15, 2022] – ArtsEmerson today announced that the play currently running through March 27 at the Emerson Paramount Center, Everyday Life and Other Odds and Ends from award-winning playwright Charlotte Meehan, will be available for on-demand streaming April 1 - 10, 2022 via its virtual venue at ArtsEmerson.org. Boston’s leading presenter of contemporary world theatre and film and the professional presenting and producing organization of Emerson College, ArtsEmerson, is partnering with Emerson Productions to capture two full performances and to edit footage into the final version which will be available for viewing beginning at 12:00PM ET on Friday, April 01, closing on Sunday, April 10 at 10PM ET.

"It’s always been a goal for ArtsEmerson to feature the incredible work that comes to our stages in our virtual venue," says ArtsEmerson Director of Artistic Programming Ronee Penoi. "I’m thrilled that our first in-person/online hybrid production of the season is amplifying the work and reach of beloved Boston company, Sleeping Weazel. As we learned over the last few years, virtual offerings are a key way to ensure that the art we share remains accessible.”
Everyday Life is a powerful and frequently hilarious story for anybody who has ever loved somebody, and reveals the inner life of those living with and affected by Parkinson’s disease. Meehan, whose previous play The Audacity: Women Speak won the 2019 Elliot Norton Award for Outstanding Production, introduces audiences to three very different couples, each of their relationships uniquely impacted by Parkinson’s disease, in a bold multi-media experience that delves into the intimate experiences that take place between heartbeats.

Striving for unconditional love, each pair responds to the avalanche of advice heaped on them with a mix of hilarity, pain, and love. Meanwhile, every mundane daily pattern, interlude of absurd bickering, and moment of human connection takes on emotional urgency. As this story illuminates so poignantly, being able bodied is, like life itself, temporary. Everyday Life weaves these diverse realities into one story that evokes laughter and tears, leaving no audience member untouched. In addition to videographer Lee François' multimedia imagery and onscreen therapists, doctors, and Parkinson’s specialists, this play contains a film of actual people with Parkinson’s and Peter DiMuro’s Public Displays of Motion dancer/collaborators bombarding the scene in a big dance of joy and rebellion against the onslaught of their diminishing mobility.

“This play has been three years in the making, and began well before that, as I was experiencing my husband Steven Bell’s decade-long struggle with Parkinson’s disease,” says Sleeping Weazel Artistic Director Charlotte Meehan. “During that time, we dreamed together of a future in which he would be part of it. Since Steve passed away in May 2020, at the height of Covid’s first wave, I have continued with this project, hoping to share a more expansive view of our love via three differently configured couples enacting their daily lives while stumbling through the challenges that life brings. We feel the compression of time caused by an incurable disease, and how mortality itself robs us all of the “happily ever after” promise in childhood fairytales. Rather than focusing on the gloomy inevitability of death, this play celebrates the precious moments of life together now. Through the strength of love and the gift of grace, unpredictable little triumphs emerge amidst the larger arc of life that we all share.”

“We are so excited to partner with our talented friends at Sleeping Weazel for this special world premiere performance,” says ArtsEmerson Executive Director David Howse. “Everyday Life and Other Odds and Ends tells a story of resilience and celebrates the power of love – it is bound to be a moving experience for our audiences.”

Tara Brooke Watkins – Director

In 2019, she worked with students at Eastern Nazarene College and guests and administration at Father Bill’s Place, a homeless shelter in Quincy, Massachusetts to hear stories and use applied theatre, story circles, and drama therapy techniques to respond to needs. From 2016-18, she worked with the Black community of North Tulsa to run story circles and used theatre to create a play showing how the history of the Tulsa Race Massacre still lives in Tulsans’ lives today. She is a member of Bethel AME Church where she co-facilitates the Shatter the Silence ministry which uses story circles and drama therapy to address sexual victimization. She is the creator of several plays which originated in this type of community engagement work using story circles. Such plays include The Bible Women’s Project, Tulsa ’21: Black Wall Street, and The Father Bill’s Play. She directed Sleeping Weazel’s The Audacity: Women Speak in 2019, Elliott Norton winner for Outstanding Production (small/fringe). However, after a tremendous bounce back and re-evaluation of his life, Lee relaunched his company under the name “FrancoisGrphx.” Through hard work and opportunities to set a new course in life, Lee is building his business into a successful digital arts company. Reflecting on his life, Lee says, “Looking back, I realized that if I had never experienced any struggles in my life, I probably would never have had the courage to take those giant leaps of faith to become the courageous man I am today.” Today, in addition to being the CEO of FGXstudios, Lee is also the Director of the Digital Media & A/V Ministry at Bethel AME Church in Jamaica Plain, MA. Red Chair Stories, directed by Lee, reveals the riveting narrative of men impacted by incarceration who are becoming entrepreneurs.

Sleeping Weazel
Led by Charlotte Meehan and Jessica Ernst, Sleeping Weazel produces bold multimedia theatre and performance with social justice ideals. Celebrating the company’s tenth year in Boston, Sleeping Weazel makes and presents live arts in multiple contexts that interweave art forms with flexibility and grace. Sleeping Weazel’s work has twice been honored with the Elliot Norton Award for Outstanding Production (small/fringe theatre) in 2019 and 2018 for Charlotte Meehan’s multivocal performance event, The Audacity: Women Speak, and James Scrugg’s 3/fifths’ Trapped in a Traveling Minstrel Show. Sleeping Weazel was founded in the UK in 1998 by the late filmmaker and theatre director David G. Hopkins and relaunched in 2012 in Boston by Charlotte Meehan and Adara Meyers. The name Sleeping Weazel alludes to the idea of “dreaming awake,” wherein the artist works to imagine and manifest what was previously outside the realm of possibility. Through exploring new dimensions, participants are invited into the dream of enchantment and abundant potential even when confronting injustice and pain.
